JOHN S. FULTON, M. D., Director

MARYLAND MILK

"Cool your milk to a temperature of 50 degrees Fahrenheit, and keep it cold," is the advice of Dr. John S. Fulton, Director of the State Department of Health, to all who handle milk in any way—dairymen, dealers, and housekeepers. Referring to the recent survey of the milk supply of 56 Maryland cities by the State Bureau of Food and Drugs, in cooperation with the American Child Health Association, Dr. Fulton summarized the findings as follows:

There is a potentially good supply available throughout the State. The supply furnished to 22 of the cities and towns comes from tuberculin tested herds.

77 per cent of the samples tested graded reasonably clean.

The average fat content of a few of the samples tested was 4.1. In several instances milk containing less than 3.5 per cent of butter fat—the minimum legal requirement—was sold.

There was considerable carelessness in regard to cooling the milk. This was indicated from the fact that when the atmospheric temperature ranged from 26 to 95 degrees, the temperature of the samples tested ranged from 36 to 95 degrees.

The bacterial findings were satisfactory, over one half the samples tested showed a low count.

In the 56 cities and towns surveyed, it was estimated that 74,723 gallons of milk are used daily. Of this amount, 66, all gallons, 88 per cent, are pasteurized. Of the milk used in Baltimore City, 98 per cent is pasteurized. In the other cities and towns covered in the survey about half of the supply—51 per cent is pasteurized.

It was also estimated that 47,000 gallons of raw milk are used by people living on farms or in small towns or settlements not covered by the survey. In many of the places out of Baltimore City, raw milk is the only kind available.

"Because milk constitutes such a necessary part of our diet," Dr. Fulton said, "it is of the utmost importance that it be produced and handled in a safe and healthful manner."
