The Spirit Of St. Louis

Scene: St. Louis. Time: Early February, 1927. First Party: "What do you think of this idea of backing young Lindbergh in this New York-Paris flight?" Second Party: "Oh, I don't know. Looks like a wild idea to me. What's Lindbergh's hunch?"

F. P.: "Says he can do it. Has $2,000 saved up which he says he will throw into the pot."

S. P.: "Well—that sounds pretty good. A young fellow with enough courage to save his money and ready to invest it when opportunity presents itself deserves to win. What do you say we help back him up." F. P.: "Righto, and okeh with me. I'm with the bunch for five hundred or a thousand."

Does the moral of this story need explaining to the young men of Chestertown?
