Two Girl Questions—Two Answers

Dear Miss Flo:— I read your recent article about husbands and wives who are continually quarreling, and it reminded me so much of my own home life that I wanted to write to you about it.

of the quarreling parents is the belittling of themselves in the eyes of the young. It results in a complete loss of pride in and respect for the parents, and you do the child the most incalculable damage that can be done.

There is no doubt about it—parental quarrels strike at the root of a child's happiness as nothing else ever does, and the children are the real victims in these family fights.

One of the finest tributes to parents fell from the lips of the daughter of a great statesman. "I never heard a raised voice in my home," she said. Doesn't that conjure up a picture that every grown man and woman would like to have in his memory gallery?

All of us have known children who have taken to the streets almost as soon as they could walk to escape homes that were full of bickerings and discord.

I am a girl eighteen, and have been going around quite a bit with fellows my own age or just a little older. Recently, however, I met a man who says he loves me but who is twice my age. Do you think I could be happy with him?

It seldom works out successfully, B. D. You wouldn't have the same interests as the older man and after the glamour has worn off you'll be glad to have younger friends—who enjoy the same things you do.
