BEADING FOR FINE BLOUSES

Two Spanish Designs That Should Appeal to Women Desiring to Make Own Garments.

It is easy to spot an imported hand-made blouse because of the extreme care with which all the finishing is done. Usually seams are put together with heading or entre-deux. This offers a suggestion to the home sewer who seeks to rival the importers in her own hand-made blouses. She can make her own entre-deux and make it in such a way that it will form a trimming for her blouse as well, according to a fashion correspondent.

First of all there is the regular fluted mesh—just one row of it. To strengthen this for use in joining seams it is well to go over the edges with a single crochet. You may be able to do this when you are joining it to the material at each side, using a crochet hook and slip stitches to hold beading and seam together.

Two Spanish designs for entre-deux are especially lovely. One in pyramid effect is done as follows: Crochet six chains; in the fifth make a single crochet, in the fourth a single, in the third a double, in the second a triple (by wrapping thread twice over needle before inserting it in chain and taking off two stitches at a time), in the first chain an extra "long" stitch (by wrapping thread three times over needle and taking off two at a time).

Repeat these pyramids for a sufficient length, then turn and make five chains for the base of each pyramid, fastening the chain with a single between each two pyramids. At the end of the piece of entre-deux make seven chains for a turn, and attach to the point of the first pyramid with a single crochet, chain five between each pyramid, fastening the chain at each point with a single.

The second Spanish beading is done by chaining enough for the length you desire. Work three doubles in the sixth stitch, but do not pull the thread through the last stitch of any of the double crochets so that when you finish you have four stitches on the needle; these you take off at once. Chain 2, three doubles into third chain from last group, etc.

Hairpin lace also makes exquisite beading. It is not easy to explain this lace in print, but almost any old-time needleworker can show the amateur in two minutes.

Three-cent railroad fare will put a crimp in this summer's long-distance vacationing.

Scratch a man who "hates England" and you usually find a man who loves Prussianism.

The question of the hour just now among neighbors is: How does your thrift garden grow?

The patriotic endeavor of some people consists chiefly in abnormal activity in eating war bread.

"Nobody kisses a war gardener," says the Toledo Blade. These generalities are always unsafe.

Another thing that makes war gardening still harder is the big jump in the price of hand plows.

Don't be afraid of disabling the war chest permanently. It will stand a whole lot of crowding yet.

The vegetables are reported as doing extraordinarily well, and the early weeds even better than that.

The garden may be a peck of trouble now, but it will yield several bushels of desirable returns later on.

If you want to find what a lot of humorists there are in the world, attempt to get your living by your wits.

While it is true that man would rather talk than listen, it is clear enough that he would rather listen than work.

Taking the finger prints of pro-Germans is all right, provided their foot-prints are followed up with sufficient care.

The man who is more loyal to his family than to the political boss does not stand much chance of getting into office.

You can size up a pro-German better by watching his face when he reads war news than by any other method.

One of the most pleasant topics of discussion at the crossroads grocery is that of the prospects of labor after the war.

Think of an American helmsman getting an Italian count and then finding out in these times that he was born in Germany!

Speaking of camouflage, how about the fellow who pretends to listen to his wife's conversation while reading a newspaper?

Here is a safe guide for conversation: Do not say anything that you would not be willing to repeat to the department of justice.

Don't judge an American's Americanism by his name. The only original Americans were Indians. Our white ancestors came from Europe.

If that "work or fight" pronouncement is rigidly enforced it will get a lot of men who are going through the motions of holding a regular job.

Some of the dollar-a-year men engaged on the aircraft program have demonstrated to an incredulous public that they were almost worth it.

Fill 'er up to the top; not only with money but with enthusiasm as well. The boys will feel a whole lot better for knowing it was done in that way.

Sugar for canning purposes will be provided by card for all housewives, officials say. Give mother the necessary sugar and she'll go over the top with the canned fruit, all right.

Whoever originated the expression about business before pleasure must have been "wise" to the fact that good fat fishin' worms are the reward of a brow-sweating session with the war gardener.

Upper berths in sleeping cars are to be used more than formerly. The government ought at least to put in sky-lights so that the moonlit scenery can be enjoyed by passengers who are unable to lose consciousness.

Give until it hurts! It will hurt the kaiser worse.

One thing not invented in Germany is the Red Cross.

Also, it is presumed, the Lord loveth a cheerful war gardener.

We cannot all go over, but we can all deputize our money.

TIME FOR DEEDS OF VALUE

Women Should Conserve Strength Wasted in Anxiety Over Hearsay and Concentrate Efforts.

Nothing is more important than taking the big view of life, especially at the present time, which is a crisis in the world's history. Men and women have been too self-centered to be of much use or service to anyone, even to themselves, but now, if at no other time, there must be a settlement of this stage of affairs, a writer states.

Self-centered folk merely consider small events and the natural affairs they take at petty things—which are of no moment whatever—cause a loss of the big opportunities in the consideration of these affairs, which are so trivial that they are not worth a moment's notice.

The woman who has spent so much time considering what other folks say and what the world's opinion means in every passing event of her life has begun to feel that after all "they say" does not count for much, and it is what she is really doing that amounts to anything. If she has any worth whatever, she will make up for lost time by conserving the strength wasted in anxiety over silly hearsay and concentrate her efforts to accomplish deeds of value and good service.
