It would be almost impossible to return the package therefore he thought a cheap package that would go with the fruit would be in the interest of the grower as his fruit would make a much better appearance if he was continually using clean new packages. This brought up the discussion of the gift package again. One of the members thought that as the commission men charged for the package they ought to pay it te the shipper. Another said this proposition was about as broad as it was long as the commission men could very easily return part of the money as pay for packages. After considerable discussion the majority of opinion seemed to be in favor of letting the package go with the fruit. The committee on fruit packages was instructed to get quotations on all kinds of packages, and report at the next meeting which will be held on the last Thursday in May at the residence of Jas. S. A Small Youth's Retort.

The pompous schoolmaster sometimes finds himself in a position which is not entirely to his taste. A great English wit, Mark Lemon, once wrote a book in which he told of a chubby-faced little urchin who passed his conceited instructor upon the street without bowing. The schoolmaster stopped and frowned.

"What has become of your manners, sir?" he roared. "It seems to me that you are better fed than taught."

"Yes, sir," replied the little boy.

"That's because you teaches me; but I feeds myself, sir."—Harper's Young People's.
