MARY CARR GROWS IN FAVOR IN 'SILVER WINGS'

Noted Actress Has Support of Her Own Children in Latest Fox Production

Remembered for her magnificent performance in "Over the Hill," Mary Carr, as the mother and leading figure around which the plot of "Silver Wings" revolves, adds greatly to her growing popularity. No less successful are her several children, who appear with her in the supporting cast. "Silver Wings" which comes to the Lyceum Theatre Thursday and Friday of next week, is one of those photo-dramas, unusual, to say the least, which moves one to wonder. It is not easily forgotten. Portraying the part of Anna Webb, Mary Carr is the mother of a numerous brood, among which is Harry her favorite. She yields to his every desire, to the extent that this boy loses his sense of proportion just as he grows into manhood. Meantime, the family has prospered, and as it draws away from the poverty of early life, Harry's ambitions take fanciful flights. He is drawn into the meshes of unscrupulous promoters and the uncertain paths of night-life. These entanglements lead gradually to embezzlements, which he places on the shoulders of his brother John, who from childhood had been the weakling of the family. John, in desperation, disappears rather than tell his mother of Harry's duplicity. In the meantime Harry opposes the engagement of his sister to a workingman and she leaves. Harry then has a free path in the family and he quickly brings the mother to financial ruin.

The reuniting of the family again comes with the finding of Harry in a cheap bowery lodging-house where he attempts suicide after two years of the direst poverty. Even under these circumstances mother love is the dominant theme, and in her declining years the mother forgets the misdeeds of the errant son and once more the family starts out to retrieve its fortune.

Not only is the photography flawless but Mrs. Carr is supported by an excellent cast and marvellously directed by Jack Ford and Edwin Caroway. In "Silver Wings" William Fox has left nothing undone to provide screen followers with the best in photoplays.

Ever Read Shoe Ads?

Notice the similarity—True, probably a great many sound alike; it's the merchant's privilege to use any words in the dictionary.

But Shoes are not alike, despite the sameness of advertising. All shoes are stitched, all cut from leather, and frequently there is the similarity ends.

Bostonian Shoes are unique in their making, carefully cut, correct sizing. These features contribute to long wear. The style and leather gives added value. Drop in and see them. You'll be agreeably surprised, too, at the moderate prices.
