THE LAST PARTING.

There is a time when the soul is sad, And the heart has more than its wonted feeling:

When the eye doth loose the lustre it And the tear doth flow, in silence steal-

There is a time, to the pure mind given, To wander from earth & fix on heaven.

There is a moment--'tis when we stand Beside the couch and watch the pillow Of one we love, and grasp the hand,

That soon must rest beneath the willow; There is a moment; we fain would rise. And follow the lov'd one to the skies. I have seen old age in its last decar, By the winds of eighty winters wasted;

With all its brightest prospects blasted: And I have felt within me then A wish to forsake the abodes of men.

We stood, a circle of mourning friends, For the loss of a dear, fond parent weep-

I cannot forget that moment-never. The sun had gone to his ocean bed,

And the winds in their island caves were reposing; All was tranquil round as the sleep of the dead, When twilight came over-yet scarcely disclosing;

A star to the eye-save the bright star of ev'en, That shone to direct the departed to Heaven! There is a moment-'tis when we stand
