From the Baltimore Transcript ON THE DEATH OF A PEDAGO Death in a fitful mood one day, For he's sometimes contrary, (Few can be always brisk and gay,) So death in a vagary, To seize a learned Professor went,

And let him know in turn, Tho' he his days in TEACHING speni He yet had much to LEARN. In vain he prayed a Latin pray'r, And made a Greek petition,

Death knew no language; all his ca Was centred in ADDITION. Alas! his fate was quickly told-Death being a reformer, He took him from this world so cold, And sent him to a WARMER.

So fell this prince of learning deep, And to his subjects brings A holiday whereon to weep, As subjects weep for Kings. Each Grammar grave, and Lexicon, Exults to find him dead,

Since he so oft hath seized upon And buried them in LEAD. Each quill rejoiceth merrily, At this their glad release, They oft had grieved their fate sho

Forever serving GEESE; None mourned except his faithful de Which thus to part was loath, For of the notion 'twas possessed One block had formed them BOTH

If so, then Death has acted right, And proved his zeal for learning, A block that boasteth wisdom's ligh Should be forever BURNING.

How he within his grave was laid Would any fain be asking, His coffin was of school books made, And well 'twas lined with CALF-S

Thus he within his grave was laid, And hence it will be found, The spot whereon that grave was n Is turned to CLASSIC GROUND.
