LOST STARS. Hast thou ever watched the stars, When they hung their beacon lights, In the blue watch towers high, In the lonely summer nights? Hast thou ever seen some bright one drop, Into darkness undefined,

As its light had been blown out, By a sudden gust of wind? Or hast thou seen one slowly fade, Growing fainter and more dim, Like a lamp whose oil is spent, With no hand the light to trim?

Like the drooping, dying stars, Thus our life-stars fade from sight, Leaving many aching hearts, Cheerless in a dusky night. Stars of love, ambition, hope, Shining on our rugged way, Lighting up the dreary path, With their bright and cheering ray, From the heart's deep firmament, Often drop before our gaze, Leaving all the soul so dark,

Through the wild and weary days. All the precious stars of Home Slowly fade and disappear-Loving Mother's tender light, Shining out so sweet and clear, Where childish footsteps trod Through the avenue of years-And a Father's earnest light Soothing all our doubts and fears-Gentle Sister's star of love,

Shining o'er life's stormy shore, From the heavens of the heart, Drop, to shine there never more. E'en the tried and trusty friend, With a spirit true and brave, Turning from us, hides his light In the darkness of the grave-And a lover's precious light, Brightest beacon-star of life,

Oft falls rayless into night-Night with woe and darkness rife. Tell me, shall we never find These lost stars of light and love? Will they not shine brighter still In God's diadem above? HATTIE HEATH. Warsaw, Ky.
