NO LONGER YOUNG.

BY MARY CLEMMER AMES. No longer young! how sad it seems, To mark our morning's waning beams, To feel our dreams are only dreams. To hear in mirth of girls and boys The refrain of our early joys,

To seem too old for simple toys. To catch a shadow in the glass-A flitting shadow as we pass-A face no longer young, alas!

Love's prophecy young years enfold, Time steals its glow with fingers cold-There's something sad in growing old.

It never comes again in sooth, With manhood's wisdom, age's truth, The pleasant fever of our youth.

We find, while memory's sea we sound, 'Mid rarest treasure wrecked around, How much we've missed, how little found.

Once from Lite's miser hands we bought Joy, wilder than our wildest thought, But ah, she kept the joy we sought. For no new gift we still may bow;

She binds upon our faded brow, No opaline crown of promise now. We bear no more the exultant palm,

Triumphant, toward our zenith's calm, But groping graveward, sing a psalm. The self-asserting soul will crave

The song-like joy it sought to save-"Twill shrink back from the drear, dark grave." Age hath its pleasure, age its pain, The ripeness of Time's soberer reign,

The sated eye, the burdened brain; The palsied pulse, the measured mien, The yearning for what once hath been, The waiting for the dread unseen!

How happy if with whitening hair, And face all limned with lines of care, The soul looks upward young and fair. [New York Evening Post.
