[For the Cambridge Democr MINE.

BY E. J. DAVY. Afar I see the rich ones pass, They snuff ambrosial air, And sometimes when I'm wandering, See castles vast and fair; But no far-stretching lands I claim, As bright ancestral line,

One brighter joy is mine. I is a lovely dream I sometimes see, Tis a lovely spot I pass-But oh, how soon it vanisheth, How soon its mem'ries pass! I often linger mid the haunts Of bliss and love divine; I linger and I dream awhile-I cannot call them mine.

But yet there is a grant to me, That riches could not buy; While every bright illusion pass, This one can never die. The purest gift, an honest soul, Whose wishes are divine, Whose longings can a token give-
