How thine own gallant sons and rare, The tyrant North defying, Have raised on high thy banner fair, And kept it proudly flying,

And now beneath that standard proud, With star gems gleaming brightly, Ten thousand Southern Warriors crowd, With growing hearts and knightly,

From classic Carolina's land, From every hill and valley, From Florida's old ocean strand, Thy brave defenders rally,

From Georgia's stately city homes, From all her rural regions; From sunny Alabama comes, The sound of gathering legions,

From Mississippi's plain and glen, Her rifles true as ever; Start up with Louisiana's men, To meet the vile invader.

Where Rio Grande rolls its tide, The tocsin sounds the danger, And quickly in his strength and pride, Leaps up the gallant Ranger.

But hark a sound, portentious, grand, Swells from the "Old Dominion," It passes through the startled land, On swift electric pinions.

Old Rip Van Winkle," hears the sound, Virginia's matchless thunder! And with a brave and giant bound, She breaks the spell of slumber.

The swelling echoes onward move, O'er river, dale and mountain; They sweep through every orange grove, And o'er each Southern fountain.

Brave Arkansas and Tennessee, The stirring chorus hearing. Have from their vales and highlands free, Sent forth their heroes daring.

Missouri and Kentucky too, Have heard the stern alurum, And fast their noble children flew, To swell the ranks of Freedom.

"Old Maryland" caught the clarion strains, And gave one throb defiant; But now alas she mourns in chains, Yet spurns the craven tyrant.

A legion of her bravest ones, With all their ancient ardor, Have sped to aid Virginia's sons, Across Botomac's water.

And myriads more remaining now, Await the day of vengeance! When they shall rise and strike the blow, For SOUTHERN INDEPENDENCE!

And thus sweet South thy trumpet call, Orlando-like hast sounded, And forth from cot and palace hall Thy Paladians have bounded.

Brave Pierce he got him an ambling nag, To Big Bethel for to ride-a, With horse and foot and eannon to boot, To guard him on every side-a. No militia officer ever to fight

Went with such a rare bravada,

Had you seen but his look, you'd have sworn form of on the book, That conquering was his trade-a. The ladies of Hampton wept for to see So gallant and warlike a sight-a, And as he rode by, they cried with a sigh,

"Oh spare our poor soldiers in fight-a." But onward he spurred, that cruel brave, His heart it would not relent-a; "I have vowed to chase the rebels from face "Of the earth, and make 'em repent-a."

The Zouaves and Trojans, the Yankees and from Rushed on in their battle attire-a, They crossed over the ridge, they came to the can bel When, the cannons opened their fire-a.

Then helter-skelter, right and left, Through flank and rear, and van-a The bullets raked, and the Yankees quaked, And tacked, and backed, and ran-a. 'Oh, where was the brave militia-man,

When the enemy came in sight-a? His officers swear he was everywhere-That is -- EXCEPT in the fight-a. He scorned all fear, but he kept the rear, To develope manœuvres neat-a, And he can point with pride to his perilous

In the van, on the retreat-a. Though Winthrop fall, though Butler call Him coward, sneak and liar-a, The Chief can still swear, that when they institut were there He first gave the word-to retire-a.

If he failed to win, it wasn't his sin,-(See his proofs in the Boston Post-a. Baltimore county, June 18th. E. s. of subj Bishop Otey to the Hon. W. ion for

So hand over the laurel to the Chief,

For sure he deserves it most-a;
