A storm is raging on the river, Clouds have overspread the sky, And darkness reigns upon the water, Seas are running mountains high; My little boat is swiftly bounding O'er the wind-tossed, troubled tide, And of my home I'm fondly thinking, As onward now I swiftly glide,

A storm is raging o'er the billow, And deaf'ning is the water's roar, As bounding swells roll o'er each other, High upon the sea-beat shore; My mind is ever homeward turning, For of my friends I'm fondly thinking, I wonder if they think of me?

A storm is raging o'er the water, But I am almost free from harm, For, just ahead, there lies an harbor, When there, I need not fear the storm. And now my boat is safely anchored, And sweetly rocking with the tide, Of you, dear friend, I'm fondly thinking, And wishing I were by your side. Monokin River, Sept. 27, 1861.
