Every piece of poetry from Mrs. Wel- "Husband, dew pass that p by's pen is "a thing of beauty," and therefore, it hain't been touched. Take "a joy forever."

Thou'lt Miss Me Evermore.

May on thy pathway beam, With love's own softness gleam, But ever from their happier rays Thy spirit's glance will flee Back to the one sad, carnest gaze

Thou'lt miss me: tones more silvery clear Than linger on my tongue, On brighter, rosier lips may cheer Where lyre and lute are strung, But still the unforgotten lays Low murmured in thine ear, Thy smile their every meed of praise, Above them all thou'lt hear.

From fairer feature's thrown, May shine upon thine altered mien. As never mine hath shone, But still the one familiar smile, That welcomed thee of old, Its place above their every wile, Within thy heart shall hold.

With stately step and bearing proud And words of courteous lore, But still when other lips my name Shall whisper where thou'rt found, Thy cheek, be it in praise or blame, Shall crimson at its sound. Thou'lt miss me from night's solemn fane,

All thoughts of me to drown, For still each blessed orb and bright On which I've gazed with thee, Shall bring the tear-drops to thy sight Thy bosom thoughts of me. Though other fairer head may rest

Where mine above should lie, The thoughts of what hath been: This wasted form and faded face Would steal your souls between.

The burning thoughts that sweep. So mournfully by being's chords? Forget them - let me weep, That though forever in each heart

The dream of love is o'er, On earth or sea - where er thou art, Thou'lt miss me evermore
