And over the sky from south to north,

Not a star is seen as the winds come forth

In the strength of a mighty glee. All day the snow came down - all day-As it never came down before, And over the earth at night there lay Some two or three feet or more. The fence was lost, and the wall of stone; The windows block'd, and the well curb gone; The haystack grown to a mountain lift; And the woodpile looked like a monster drift As it lay at the farmer's door. As the night set in, came hail and snow,

And the air grew sharp and chill,

And the warning roar of a sullen blow

Was heard on the distant hill; And the Norther! see! on the mountain peak, In his breath how the old trees writhe and carriage; and, instead of a splen He shouts along the plain, Ho! Ho! He drives from his nostrils the blinding snow,

And growls with a savage will! Such a night as this to be found abroad In the snow and the stinging air. A shivering dog, in the field by the road, When the hail through his shaggy hair The wind drives hard, doth couch and growl, And shut his eyes-with a dismal howl; Then to shield himself from the cutting sleet, of hoops-now lies on the table His nose is pressed on his quivering feet, Pray, what does the dog do there?

His master came from the town to-night, And lost the traveled way; And for hours he trod with main and might A path for his horse and sleigh; But deeper still the snow-drifts grew, And colder still the fierce wind blew; And his mare, a beautiful Morgan brown, That deep in a huge drift lay.

Many a plunge with a frenzied snort, She made in the heavy snow; And her master stove till his breath grew short. With a word and a gentle blow; But the snow was deep, and the tugs were

So he struggled back to his sleight again, And strove to shelter himself in vain, With his coat and his buffalo. He has given the last faint jerk of the rein To rouse up his dying steed; And the poor dog howls to the blast in vain For help in his master's need. He strives for awhile with a wistful cry To catch but a glance from his heavy eye, And wags his tail if the rude wind flap

The skirt of his coat across his lap, And whines that he takes no heed. The wind goes down; the storm is o'er; 'Tis the hour of midnight past; The forest writhes and bends no more In the rush of the mighty blast. The moon looks out with a silver light On the high old hills, with the snow all white; boiled lobster. And the giant shadow of Camel's Hump, Of ledge, and tree, and ghostly stump, On the silent plain are cast.

But there are they -- by the hihden log --Who came that night from the town-All dead! the man and his faithful dog, And his beautiful Morgan blown! He sits in his sleigh-his face is bland-With his cap on his head, and the reins in his
