And, filling with the breeze, They bear her swiftly onward On her voyage o'er the seas.

She bears within her bosom A buoyant, youthful band; Perhaps their hearts beat lightly At leaving "Father-land."

They have not yet experienced The perils of the deep, And think not of the thousands Who in its caverns sleep.

With bright anticipations They count on coming fame, Still hoping in the future To carve themselves a name.

May Heaven guard those wanderers And bring them safely through The voyage now commencing, With heart and purpose true.

From many hearts to-day, For safety to the PREBLE, Now wending fast her way. Oh! many are the trials Which wait upon the boy,

And prayers will be ascending

When wandering from the homestead Of which he was the joy. When in the hours of childhood He lisped at mother's knee, Those sacred words "Our Father,"

In tones of purity. The spell of such remembrance Comes often to the heart; It often comes uncalled for, Unwilling to depart.

To-day within the PREBLE, As o'er the waves she glides, While gracefully contending With changing wind and tides.

Are souls to be remembered! And now the fervent prayer Is going up from East to West For those assembled there.

From North to South the echoes Will mingle as they come, For safety to that youthful band, Away from friends and home,

Oh! who can tell the anguish Which fills our human hearts, As from the homes of early love, Each cherished child departs.

Then what save trust in Heaven Can sooth the wounded soul! Still each rebellious thought, and give The grace which can control!
